Her mentors are guiding her in the techniques she can use to learn about the natural world. Learning to sit and watch, to keep a journal, to look at and try to understand tracks, and more. Her mentors expect a lot of her and dont coddle her, although they do look out for her. This is a book that might find many audiences. The very young will enjoy coloring and scribbling. The shy and uncertain young girl or boy may find some direction and confidence in relating to nature. Those already seeking to develop nature skills will see it as a handy how-to book.I chuckle to myself as I think of a macho young man, who desires to develop his skills in the outdoors, proudly showing off his favorite Nature Scout Emily coloring book.1 of 1

When her dad sent Emily Ghost Raven to live with her half-sister, the great tracker Ravenwing, Emily had no idea what to expect. Living in the mountains was something she'd never done before and she didn't have a clue what "learning the old ways" even meant. Her new teacher, Flying Blade, teaches Emily many things, such as how to make fire without a match, how to make a shelter out of sticks and leaves, and how to see animals up close and personal.

From the Author "Nature Scout Emily" is a labor of love, combining both my love of nature and art. I hope that it maybe a source of enjoyment to children, introducing them to the wonder and joy of the natural world, as well as teaching them some survival skills. I have had a number of fascinating encounters with animals simply by being still and observing. I have been circled by a barracuda, gotten in between bear cubs and a mama bear (not advised), had my nose licked by a deer, come upon three baby owls in a tree, and been tracked by a cougar (also not advised). I have learned to listen to the birds. And I have found a calm in the woods which is not to be found anywhere else. About the Author Clint Hollingsworth comes by his love of the outdoors naturally: his grandparents Slim Janie Hollingsworth started the Icicle Island Camp and High Mountain Packers, taking people camping into the Cascade Mountains of Washington state. Imagine camping for a living! The Icicle Island Camp was the family passion and all the Hollingsworths worked the mountain trails of the Icicle Valley near Leavenworth. Having spent a good deal of his time in the woods growing up, Clint developed a certain sensitivity to the natural environment, enhanced when he became a student of the Tom Brown Jr Tracker School, learning wilderness survival and tracking. This led the author to more advanced training from naturalist Jon Young in tracking and awareness, skills which have saved his life in the far backcountry. Along with a fine arts degree, Hollingsworth went on to study tracking under Tom Brown, Jr., consultant on "The Hunted", and holds a 4th degree black belt in ShoRei Shobu Kan Okinawan Goju Ryu karate. He co-authored "Wolves in Street Clothing" with judo and martial arts expert Kris Wilder, and is the author/artist/creator of the long-running post-apocalyptic webcomic (and its attending books, including the full-color "The Scout Trail" for middle-grade and teens) The Wandering Ones at wanderingones.com with over 20,000 readers across the world. He lives in the beautiful Cascade Mountains in Washington state with his lovely wife Suzette, also an author.
